Matt Mason has published two full-length books of poetry, Things We Don't Know and The Baby That Ate Cincinnati, eight chapbooks and two anthologies. He is a mentor for young writers across Nebraska; a poetry activist; has been a member of the team representing Omaha at the National Poetry Slam on multiple occasions; has run poetry programs for the U.S. State Department working in Nepal, Romania, Botswana and Belarus; and was named Nebraska's State Poet in 2019. He is the recipient of a Pushcart Prize for his poem "Notes For My Daughter Against Chasing Storms." He currently serves as Executive Director of the Nebraska Writers Collective and festival coordinator for the Louder Than a Bomb: Great Plains Youth Poetry Festival. Matt lives in Omaha with his wife, the poet Sarah McKinstry-Brown, and daughters Sophia and Lucia.
