Where They Are

Class Prophecy

The wheels of progress turn ever onward, but every now and then they get an added boost from some unknown genius who labors in his back yard to make the wheels go for himself.

Ten years ago (1930) revealed airplanes perfected to the last degree, air-submersibles able not only to fly but also to fold their wings and travel under sea, and parachutes driven by motor. Even time flies.

In 1930 I could see my industrious classmates profitably using their time in the study hall. Now to see them it is necessary to go to different parts of the world. This I did not over a year ago.

On Monday morning, February 1st, 1939, a courteous staff of travel experts attended me as I prepared to start on the "Portland Limited" from Chicago. I hadn't supposed I would meet an old classmate so soon but in this day and age you can expect almost anything.

As I was about to check my baggage there stood Harold Keep, a baggage clerk. I hardly recognized him and I am little afraid he is a henpecked husband suffering from the pip. Evidently he can have his own way at home if he agrees with his wife. After I left the station to go to my rooms I met with an accident. It's too bad Luther Burbank didn't perfect a banana peel with brakes. Just as I was regaining my consciousness, which was only a matter of seconds, I looked to see who was helping me from the pavement. I didn't know at the time who he was but his face seemed familiar. I was determined to find out who he was so I asked him to my apartment. After I had him started talking I had quite a time getting him to stop. Nevertheless I learned that he was Adrian Dulitz. He knew he had three sisters but couldn't remember whether they were boys or girls. He seemed to have quite a disagreeable cold in the head but it was better than nothing.

Next day, my first day out, I stopped at Omaha and at the new Union Station, who should I meet but Denton Cook. He told me about his flea circus in New York. He said it was on the verge of bankruptcy for it was gradually going to the dogs.

Evening found me in Cheyenne, Wyoming where the train tarried to change engines, reminiscent of the historic past when the stage coaches replaced their panting horses with fresh, spirited steeds. Looking out of the window of the Pullman I saw a queer but familiar looking man driving a hearse just ahead of a seemingly endless line of cars. It was none other than Donald McIntyre. How surprising I should say. But there is one consolation, he isn't bothered with a back seat driver.

Enroute to the Pacific northwest many beautiful sights unfolded itself to me through the car window. At a later time we arrived at Portland, Oregon. On the way to the park at Portland we came in contact with many people. Out in the distance I saw an old prospector, shabbily dressed with his burrows, wheelbarrow and mining equipment. In the rear came walking a wrinkled, care worn old lady, cheaply dressed who was endeavoring to appear happy. As we approached them I recognized them as my old acquaintances, Iris Krebs and Lawrence Bintz. I assured them that they could make an honest living nowadays, they wouldn't have much competition. Walking further we saw a fisherman sitting along the bank of a stream. To my surprise it was Elliott Drake. He was taking a "reel" interest in his work until he found he could catch only a twenty cent fish on a rod which cost him thirty-five dollars.

On a corner near an eating house we discovered Floyd Layher running an animal training zoo. We watched him for some time and after much effort he had the jumping octopus and some pink spiders calmed down.

The Tiger of '31

It happened to be just at noon so we stopped at an eating house. To my astonishment there was Wanda Tucker dressed in black and white and acting as head waitress. If cream is an aid to beauty Wanda must be using buttermilk.

Now, everyone knows a man can be rich if he has enough money. We met William Sommers walking through the park. Bill had made a fortune on his cactus farm and now carries his head high in the air. His moustache travels to far places on his countenance while his square jaws follow a career of their own. He also wears a toupee but manages to keep it under his stove-pipe hat.

A day later we met Opal Terry who had finally taught a group of none-too-bright children that Plymouth Rocks do not lay corner stones. We were glad to know that Elery King had worked hard to master some field of art. He wrote an article on perpetual motion, and it proved to be such a success that it always came back when he sent it to a magazine.

While we were attending a "swell" wedding, where they even threw puffed rice we chanced to meet my long, lost acquaintance Edna Baker. We went to the trouble of asking her why she shaved her eyebrows off, she told us she didn't want to have anything on her mind. Edna was busy learning the Chinese language so she could get her laundry back. We found that Harold Hosch's business was failing. The animal crackers he manufactured were getting the hoof and mouth disease.

While shopping a day later we saw Avis Voorhees interested in her work. It is certain that business is good when she can sell antiques faster than the manufacturers can make them.

Paul Garrett has become a boxer and is so tough he uses a blow-torch for an atomizer. Paul is still trying to master social problems. He considered it a small social error, at a formal dinner, when he had three forks and two spoons left over.

The following afternoon we crossed the Pacific via air-sub. A brief stop was made at the Hawaiian Islands. Here we chanced to see Fern Cook at the coral-pink castle at Waikike. She informed us that she had been employed by a sea-food magnate for many years and was working as maid in his oyster beds.

At the castle of the Pale Lady in the Amber mountains, Greeley Gebhardt devoted his time to the service of her Highness.

When we reached the lands of the Orient, we were happy to meet another classmate. Fortunately we arrived at Tokyo just in time to see a diving contest and swimming race. Olive Portis was the only contestant we knew. Lucky for her, after going down the third time, she remembered she could swim.

Soon we were in Moscow. While there, we were very much surprised to see Dolores Miller a jill-of-all-trades without a job. She could do anything yet she had nothing to do. She should have gone into a business for herself.

From Moscow we went to Africa via Carter's Camels (not in reference to Cigarettes.) After arriving safely in Alexandria we decided to take a little journey in the jungles of this country. We hunted up a guide and with his assistance he took us to a taxicab station, here we rented a fleet of Austins with no other than Miss Strong as Commander-in-Chief. At the end of our trip we were fully aware of the fact that Miss Strong still possessed the qualities of leadership that she had during the 1930-31 school year.

While in Paris we met an alphabetical soup saleslady. It was no one but Dorthea Garrett. It must have been pitiful cases when she was compelled to swallow her own words.

Back in United States, after a long journey, we discovered Clark Beck in Massachusetts making a fortune counting Boston Beans.

After we had gone into a theatre at Philadelphia who should we see but Laverne Jess. Nowadays it is usually the usher who takes the leading part. He led us to some expensive box seats.

Last, but not least, we visited the cozy little country home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Stillman (formerly Eveleen Duryea.) Their cotton plantation had proved a big success, but the way Eveleen worked around the house you would think she was married to the Secretary of Labor.

Now my good friends, as I emerge from the tomb of profound sleep I come to the conclusion that my morning sleepiness, at my office in a towering skyscraper in New York is due to too little sleep the night before.

The Junior class of 1931 has been small in numbers but great in accomplishments, only a few of which can be mentioned here.

Owing to a misunderstanding the major party was forfeited the first semester. This was replaced by winning one from the athletic department.

The Juniors have had a representative in every line of contests including; athletics, music, agriculture and commercial.

The play "Rain, Rain, Rain" was given by the Juniors January 23. The cast was composed of Mildred Daily, Roland Daily, Alvin Bredthauer, Evelyn Neilsen, Neil McCrary, Meta Hermsmeyer and Glen Farrell.

The Junior Senior Banquet was given May 12, 1931.

The freshmen class is not so large, however should you look you would find them represented on the athletic field, in music and vocational departments. They are noted for their scholastic standing having sent representatives to various contests with very favorable results.

Although freshmen now, they have only started to climb the ladder of success and by their senior year, you shall have heard of them many times. Their goal and ultimate aim is to climb this ladder of success to the top.

The Girls Athletic Association was organized in September, 1929. Realizing that the need of physical development among the girls is just as important as among the boys of the school, the athletic program was offered as an optional course this year.

The two main athletic events of the year were the Fall Play Day at Ord and the Spring Play Day at St. Paul. Scotia, also, took part in the "Free throw Goal" tournament sponsored by the State Athletic Association.

Most of the class periods were spent in organized games. The work covered this year: First eight weeks, baseball; second eight weeks, basketball; third eight weeks, soccer goal ball and hit-pin baseball and the fourth eight weeks, track.

The awards were regulated by the State League, which has formulated a point system.

First Row: Helen Cook, Peggy Gebhardt, Dorathy Garrett, Julia Duff, Helen Kolbush, Doris Scott, Esther Hermsmeyer.

The pep club as an organization was organized in the fall of 1929.

Pep rallies on Friday's of each week gave the group a chance to exercise their lungs as well as to give cheers to those who brought back fame for Scotia high.

The school yell—

Go gang go,
 Fight gang fight
 Win gang win

The purpose of this organization is to have more and better co-operation between the Juniors and Seniors; to exchange ideas with the object of becoming better teachers.

The Normal Training Club was organized in March 1930. All students enrolled in the normal training department are eligible to this club.

To have virtue and to be an intelligent and cheerful leader is the aim of a Normal Trainer of 1931-1932.

Glee Clubs

Success describes the Glee Clubs of 1931. The High School Operetta, "Jerry of Jericho Road," was presented on December 19, 1930. The cast of characters were: Dolores Miller, Paul Garrett, Iris Krebs, Lawrence Bintz, Edna Baker, Laverne Jess, Mildred Daily, Peggie Gebhardt and Darrell Randall.

Due to good co-operation and the excellent directing on the part of Miss Carol Strong, the Glee Clubs have been able to enter contests at St. Paul, Grand Island and Lincoln.

Due to weather conditions the "Music Festival" which was to be held at St. Paul was called off.

First Row: Dolores Miller, Jacob Lehn, Leo Klein, Eldon Wheeler, Everett Sommer, Roland Daily, Laverne Jess, Twylah Johanson, Iris Krebs.
Second Row: Darrell Randall, Dale Bredtlauer, Miss Strong.

Orchestra

This year the High School Orchestra has been rather handicapped. It has been impossible to take school time for orchestra practices, which has made regular practice times uncertain.

The aim of the orchestra has been to develop group playing and further instrumental music.

Four members in the group are beginners, but considering all in all the orchestra has enjoyed a successful year of work.

First Row: Donald Toogood, Leo Klein, Mervin Scott, Jacob Lehn, Laverne Jess, Glen Farrell.

The Future Farmers of America are the boys enrolled in the Vocational Agricultural course of our school. The purpose of this organization is to fasten greater interest in agriculture, not only in the classroom but in home projects and in the community. In the class room a study of soils, crops, livestock (their feed and management) is made. Farm marketing, economics and sociology, are also studied. This organization has sponsored as community projects, a Greeley county corn husking contest, a Father and Son banquet and a livestock and crops judging team to the state contest at Lincoln. The program of work for the organization is just what the name implies, that which builds for greater citizenship in the rural life of our community.
